A background image showing three students (two women and one man) looking intently at a screen, with a bright light reflecting off the screen. The image has a blue tint.

The NTR National Teaching Repository

Using the Repository

Acknowledging academic and intellectual property

Using the Repository

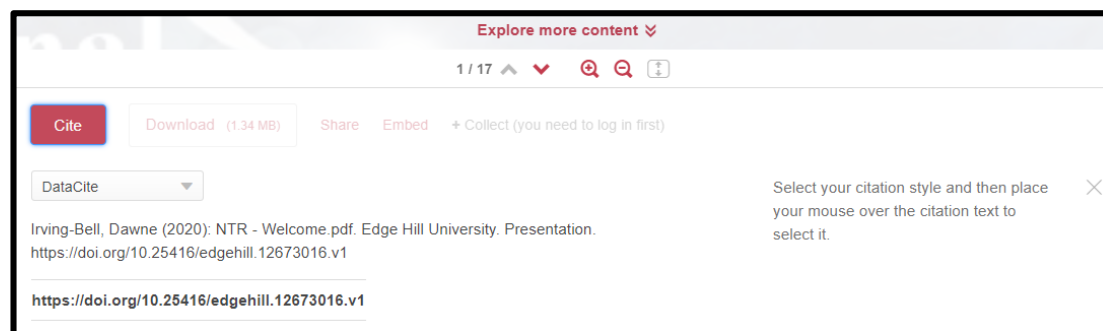

Acknowledging academic and intellectual property

The repository is an open access resource that you can browse and download resources from as often as you like.

In drawing on the practice of others, just as you would with other forms of academic work please be mindful to respect the intellectual property of the originating author(s).

In conjunction with the Creative Commons Licencing allocated to each submission, in drawing upon, using or reproducing work please ensure that you acknowledge the author and cite their work.

The system makes citing work very simple.
You simply click here.

You can access the National Teaching Repository here.

'...browse, view and download the very best ideas either to use as 'off the shelf' transferable strategies or with adaption to meet the needs of your context'.

Using the Repository

Searching for the best practice...

You can access the National Teaching Repository here.
Once into the repository the first screen will highlight the most recently added items.

By clicking on the small arrow here you will be able to search the repository by sub-group.

You may also search by category, key word and author.

Searching for the best practice...